

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements ix

List of abbreviations xi

01 Introduction and summaries 1

What this book is about 1

Who should read this book? 3

How the book is structured 6

The paradigm shift occurring in SCM 7

What every CEO really needs to know about SCM 10

An executive summary 13

A summary for the non-specialist 19

Notes 20

02 What is Demand-Driven SCM? 22

Demand-Driven SCM: agility thru' stability 22

Ever heard of Kaikaku? 29

What Demand-Driven SCM is not 30

Demand-Driven SCM defined 35

Notes 69

03 Why Demand-Driven SCM? 73

Agility, flexibility, stability and the other 'i-t-y-s' 73

Why flow? 80

Why pull? 85

Should planners ignore MRP's exception messages? 91

Can SCM be deductive? 93

Supply chain optimization – what does it really mean? 98

High variability? Go Lean, adopt pull! 102

The impact of SCM upon quality 105

Has Lean been a waste? 110

Demand-Driven escalator management successfully applied
at Holborn tube station 115
SCM – a comedy of errors? 117
Notes 119

04 How to operate a Demand-Driven Supply Chain 122

Strategic 122
Execution and event management 160
Monitor (but don't touch!) 166
Supply chain complexity, variability and smart metrics 167
The organizational impact of Demand-Driven SCM 176
Just how integrated does SCM have to be? 182
Demand-Driven supply change management 185
Notes 192

05 Demand-Driven SCM and Lean 195

Some reassurance and some counter-intuitive facts 195
Can smaller batches reduce costs? Yes – really! 197
High-speed machines – do they always pay? 202
Note 205

06 Why aren't we already using Demand-Driven SCM? 206

In the beginning there was simple reorder point and reorder cycle 206
The MRP Crusade 207
1961: Forrester, Burbidge, Little, Kingman and bullwhip 209
Lean, Theory of Constraints and Factory Physics 216
Summary 220
Notes 225

07 The Demand Driven Institute, Demand-Driven MRP and SaaS 226

The Demand Driven Institute 226
Demand-Driven MRP 227
Software as a Service (SaaS) 233
Note 234

08 What next – control theory? 235

Notes 239

Postscript: from supply chain – an apology to our commercial colleagues 241

The story behind DDMRP – contribution by Chad Smith and Carol Ptak, co-founders of the Demand Driven Institute 244

Further reading 250

Index 253