

CONTENTS

About the author x

Acknowledgements xi

Introduction: from ink to link 1

01 Communicating whatever we please 6

Messy, unethical and opinionated origins 9

Select and noteworthy happenings 11

An explosion of opinion 14

Playing with fire 16

‘Bible, ax and newspapers’ 21

A brief flowering 23

The world’s great informer 25

Every species of intelligence 27

02 Furnishing the world with a new set of nerves 31

A great moral organ 32

The true Church of England 34

The Steam Intellect Society 36

We are all learning to move together 37

A vast agora 41

I order five virgins 43

The few dozen lines of drivel 45

A press typhoon 48

The waning power of the harlot 50

03 The gilded age 55

A fluid mass 56

The brute force of monopoly 57

Sorrow, sorrow, ever more 60

A well-conducted press 61

‘So will it be goodbye to Fleet Street?’ 64

I really loathe people with power	67
Deregulation	69
Boom and decline	73
Owners, news and celebrity	77

04 The engine of opportunity 83

Chain reaction	85
Utopia or dystopia?	88
What the internet does to the business of news	91

05 Rethinking journalism again 106

Complexity	108
Frontiers fade and vanish	109
Ink marks on squashed trees	110
Comparison and choice	111
The downside risks of choice	113
Authority	115
Manipulation	117
Objectivity under strain	120
The advantages and drawbacks of institutions	122
The management of abundance	124
New media and change: a case study	128
Conclusion	131

06 The business model crumbles 137

Over a cliff	138
Print is not dead	142
Palliative care for print	145
Flipping to digital	148
Making people pay: walls and meters	151
The demand for news	158
What we don't know about online news	160

07 Credibility crumbles 164

Newsroom culture	165
Operation Motorman	169
Phone hacking	171

	‘Quality’ and ‘seriousness’	172
	Trust and authority	177
	A spell is broken	179
08	The Leveson judgement	183
	Diagnosis	184
	Prescription	188
	A third way	190
	Regulation’s future	193
	Plurality	194
09	Throwing spaghetti at the wall	200
	Four core tasks	201
	We were having journalistic moments!	204
	Error is useful	219
10	Clues to the future	223
	Business models	224
	From the ashes of dead trees	229
	Index	237