

Contents

About the authors xi

Acknowledgements xiii

- 1 Introduction 1
 - What went wrong? 3
 - Why write this book? 6
 - Why write it now? 7

- 2 Who's been apologizing and what are they sorry about? 9
 - Who is actually saying sorry? 10
 - How are organizations saying sorry? 12
 - The corporate apology starter pack 14

- 3 The six reasons organizations apologize and the one reason they won't 21
 - How organizations fail 23
 - So why do organizations apologize? 26
 - Why organizations won't say sorry 38

- 4 Culture, values and consumer expectations: Why 'sorry' means different things to different industries 41
 - Friction – and why your buying habits influence your chances of getting an apology 44
 - How market friction affects Uber's conscience 45

- 5 The definitive modern apology and why everyone ignored it 47
 - Valentine's Day crisis 49
 - The world's first corporate social media apology 51

- An offer of repair 52
The response to the response 53
- 6 If everyone's sorry, nobody is sorry: Are we all apologizing too much? 55
Are we really apologizing too much? 58
Broadcasting our apologies far and wide 59
Outrage capitalism and the plummeting value of 'sorry' 60
- 7 How the experts apologize without saying sorry: 'Runway excursion incidents', 're-accommodating passengers' and 'overpressurization' 69
When is a plane crash not a plane crash? 70
'A disappointing event for our company' 71
Unauthorized takeoff 73
Re-accommodating passengers 74
'Overpressurization...followed by a fire' 77
- 8 Schrödinger's apology, grammatical deflections and evasions 79
How to spot a Schrödinger's apology 82
What can we do better? 84
The evasive power of grammar 85
- 9 Crisis fatigue and the case for rationing apologies 91
Preempting the backlash 93
Crisis fatigue and tactical appeasement 94
The spectrum of contrition 98
The case for rationing 100
- 10 It's not about you: How CEOs sabotage their own apologies 105
Tony Hayward – BP 106
Keep it simple 109

- 11 Keep trying: Why it took three of the world's biggest brands three attempts to say sorry 111
 - Facebook 112
 - United Airlines 114
 - Papa John's – third time lucky 116

- 12 'Forced to apologize?': Fostering resilience and identifying customer intent 123
 - Court-ordered apologies 126
 - Allergy sufferers vs Sony Pictures 127
 - How can organizations be more resilient? 130

- 13 'We got it wrong': What to say when you've killed a puppy (and how to fake humility) 135
 - 'We got it wrong' 136
 - 'We missed the mark' 138
 - 'Sometimes mistakes happen' 141

- 14 Self-service apologies: Performative crisis management and teaching consumers to expect too much 145
 - Cultural hypervigilance 146
 - The burden of corporate innocence 147
 - The exceptions that prove the rule 151
 - Performative crisis management 153
 - Self-service apologies 160
 - The creative cost of reflexive apologies 161

- 15 Optics anxiety and apologizing for how things look 165
 - The importance of small details in a crisis 167
 - Optics anxiety 169
 - Topman vs the people of Liverpool 170
 - The cost of caring about optics 175

- 16 The true cost of corporate atonement: Why frontline staff pay the price 179
 Trickle-down anxiety 181
 Approval-seeking policy changes 182
 Who is really paying the price for Starbucks' mistake? 184
- 17 The economics of saying sorry: Why an apology could cost $5 billion 187
 What does being sorry actually cost? 188
 Lessons from nature 190
 Restitutions and why 25,000 could be the magic number 191
 What's an apology worth? 193
 Tesla's five billion dollar apology 194
 Is an apology worth $73,000? 196
- 18 Crisis communications and the potential for mischief: How organizations profit from their rivals' apologies 199
 At least we're not Uber... 200
 On-demand criticism – an $81 billion market that's ready to destroy your reputation 202
 Interflora and the unintended consequences of fighting Internet spam 207
- 19 Apology laundering: How a supermarket and an MP were defrauded of 'sorry' 211
 Apology laundering – how the media manipulated a row about relish 214
 False confessions and the weaponization of vague language 218
- 20 Apologizing on behalf of others: Lessons from car makers, presidents and freelance apologizers 223
 Passive-aggressive proxy apologies 224
 Historical apologies 226

- 21 £1 million in sales in four days: Discover the unexpected benefits of not saying sorry 235
- The missing piece of the jigsaw 237
 - Alienation marketing 239
 - The ‘feel-bad factor’ 241
 - The power of tribalism 242
- 22 Don’t mistake kindness for weakness: Why the UK’s ‘nicest’ brand refused to say sorry 247
- How to defend your organization against accusations of sexism and selling blasphemous toilet tissue 250
 - Redefining the ‘communications crisis’ 254
 - What can we learn from M&S? 256
- 23 Conclusion: How to manage the apology impulse and deliver meaningful responses 259
- Don’t make promises you can’t keep 260
 - Have a plan 261
 - Step 1 – Decide if you are you sorry 263
 - Step 2 – Decide how sorry you are 265
 - Step 3 – Decide what you are going to do about it 265
 - Remember to take your time 269
 - A note on demanding apologies 270
- Notes* 273
- Index* 329