Information overload – inability to balance information 26

Lack of consequence – the wrongdoers go unpunished 28

The way we teach leadership – an overemphasis on individuality and specialism 29

Too many incompetent men – a lack of balanced skills 30

Overconfidence as a source of narrow thinking 31

Communication yes, but no conversation – no balance of human processes 33

Lost in the fog 35

The lack of qualitative measures 36

The lack of role models 37

Philosophy as a destination, not a vehicle 38

About the authors

Chris Lewis and Dr Pippa Malmgren are both entrepreneurs, consultants and authors. Their first collaboration was The Leadership Lab: Understanding leadership in the 21st century. This won Leadership Book of the Year and Business Book of the Year in 2019. Chris's Too Fast to Think: How to reclaim your creativity in a hyper connected work culture and Pippa's Signals: How everyday signs can help us navigate the world's turbulent economy also achieved bestseller status in the US and UK.

Chris founded one of the world's largest marketing firms and advises a variety of CEOs, senior politicians, members of the royal family and international philanthropic organizations.

Pippa was Special Adviser to President George W Bush and advises CEOs, prime ministers, and the heads of major banks and the world's largest institutional investors. She also founded a robotics firm and speaks regularly at firms like Google and American Express, and major banks.
