

CONTENTS

About the author xi

Foreword xii

Acknowledgements xiv

PART ONE Shopper happiness 1

01 Delivering shopper happiness 3

Making decisions in a more fact-driven manner 5

Operating in several channels at the same time 6

A skill set to deeply understand shoppers 6

The emotional shopper 7

Shopper happiness gives meaning to the organization's mission 8

Answers to the retail challenges 9

Retail is about thinking and doing 10

Considerations for the choice of the retail dimensions 11

Sharing 13

Structure of the book 14

PART TWO Shoppers are people 17

02 The myth of impulse purchasing 19

The 70 per cent impulse myth 19

Too much stimulation in just two seconds 21

Pitfalls of market research 22

Impulse buying 23

Faster is more 25

Notes 26

03 Tapping into irrational shopper behaviour 28

What is irrational behaviour? 29

Automatic shopping behaviours and other pitfalls 31

Why do shoppers fall into irrational pitfalls? 40

Nudge: how to apply knowledge of irrational thinking 41

Nudging in retail practice 43

Shopper tool to apply nudges 44

Public sector takes the lead 45

Is nudging shoppers right? 46

Notes 48

04 Understanding the shopper brain through neuro research 50

Why traditional surveys fail 50

Benefits of neuro research 51

Gender differences 53

Age differences 54

Applications of neuro research 54

Practical suggestions from neuro research 56

Notes 59

PART THREE Channel choices 61

05 Channel preference: the future of the hypermarket channel 63

Carrefour at a crossroads 64

Carrefour, or a hypermarket problem? 65

Reasons for the growth of hypermarkets 66

The advantages for hypermarkets disappear 68

Strategies to turn hypermarkets around 70

Carrefour Planet as a solution 72

Strengths of Carrefour Planet 74

Is Planet the answer to the hypermarket challenges? 76

Concluding thoughts 77

Notes 78

06 What the shopper wants from online shopping channels 80

- Online is inevitable 80
- Why the future is online 82
- Why are groceries different online? 87
- What is slowing down online grocery sales? 88
- Three business-model questions: picking, routing, delivery 92
- Delivery types 94
- Online as an escape from saturated markets 96
- Positioning of logistical execution or shopping experience 98
- Making online selection inspirational for shoppers 100
- Same marketing principle, different practices 101
- Online as incremental sales for traditional groceries 103
- Conclusion 104
- Notes 106

PART FOUR Fact-driven decision making 109

07 Getting your assortment right 111

- Available space as starting point for product assortment size 111
- Shopper-driven product assortment 113
- Transitioning through phases of assortment life cycle 120
- Example: evolution of Schuitema organization 122
- Shoppers like it: more is less 124
- Retailer desire for 'more is less' 127
- May I have some more, please 129
- Retailers can have it all: large product assortment without decision-making stress 134
- Notes 136

08 Really making loyalty card programmes work 138

- What has been learnt from Tesco? 138
- Benefits of loyalty card data versus other data 141
- International expansion 142
- The power shift to retailers 144
- A new phase for the market research industry 144
- Implementation of loyalty card programmes by retailers 147

Consequences of implementing loyalty card programmes for suppliers	150
Risks	154
Notes	157

09 Making big data digestible 158

What is big data?	158
Drivers of big data in retail	160
Opening new ways to make the shopper happier	162
Experimentation as second nature in fast-moving consumer goods	164
Privacy challenges	165
Big, clean and open data	166
Notes	167

PART FIVE In-store execution 169

10 The unstoppable growth of private labels and opportunities for A-brands 171

Recessions accelerate private labels	172
Motives for private labels	173
The A-brand answers to private labels	175
Discussions between the retailer and the A-brand supplier	177
Notes	183

11 The unexplainable effect of music 184

Effects of music	185
Emotions	187
Music and store employees	191
Turn down the music	191
Practice	192
Notes	194

12 Can scents work wonders? 196

Are scents effective?	196
Indirect effect on mood	197
Primed to respond	198

Congruency with all retail marketing variables	201
Scent used as a differentiator in retail marketing	204
Retail density	206
When to apply scents	206
Notes	208

13 Self-scanning is more than savings 209

No effect on stock-loss	210
The business case for self-checkout	213
Notes	220

PART SIX Organizational development 221

14 The birth of category management 223

The first category management project	223
New term: category management	227
Category management as part of ECR	229
Transfer of ECR to Europe	229
The eight-step category management process	232
The model became outdated	234
ECR's contribution	236
Notes	239

15 True customer understanding 241

Wasting the time of retailers	241
Trade marketer as a transactional partner	242
Trade marketing evolution	245
An understanding of the customer as a condition for professionalizing trade marketing	249
Five things a category manager wants in a category management proposal	252
Note	255

16 Shopper marketing: new phase of trade marketing 256

Definition of shopper marketing	256
Best-in-class shopper marketing	258

Two main drivers of shopper marketing	259
A new role for consumer marketing	261
Obstacles for shopper marketing	263
Getting started	265
Notes	266

PART SEVEN Embracing the shopper 267

17 Retailers in action to increase shopper happiness 269

Index	271
--------------	-----

COPYRIGHT MATERIAL
NOT FOR REPRODUCTION